In an age when relationships between individuals and organizations are getting more and more complex, it is not enough to only have an excellent IQ. While there are many benefits to having high intelligence, many managers, supervisors, and other workers—particularly those who work in businesses in which interpersonal relationships are key—have become keenly aware that workplace success may depend on their ability to use another invaluable personality trait: emotional intelligence.

A webinar was conducted in association with ABLE & i-Care Academy, Navi Mumbai on 4th June 2020 from 5:00 p.m. to 6:30 p.m.

The resource person was Mr. Ramesh Neel, Business coach, behavioral analyst. A total of 483 participants from various places have attended the webinar.

In a spirited discussion of how ideas should be winnowed, Mr. Ramesh suggested that to be effective leaders in the workplace, managers, supervisors, and other authority figures must be able to function productively with people under their charge. High emotional intelligent leaders are able to use their social skills to foster rapport and trust with their employees.
