Brief Note :

The world seems to have got into a crisis of confidence; demand for oil is falling; borrowers default on loans more and more; the economic principles that the world has followed for the past many decades are under doubt. The usual tools for analysing this as a crisis in capitalism, calls for more intervention or less intervention, proposals of more regulation or less regulation, etc., are no longer working. What brought the world to this crisis? Where did we take the wrong turn?

This webinar on Forgotten Aspects of Classical Economics and their Relevance Today points out the missteps we have taken and provides suggestions for course corrections to our chartered route
